“i hate this.”

jaron groaned, throwing a final punch to planet's jaw.

planet sharply inhaled as his body crumbled onto the obsidian ground, not moving. after a moment, he awoke with a small gasp. planet fidgeted and pushed himself off the ground, brushing nonexistent dirt off his clothes. they wiped a trail of blood running down their face with their knuckle, disregarding the way it smeared on their hand. nothing was aching anymore at least.

“not much we can do about it,” planet replied, striking jaron in the eye. there was a pained hiss. “we just have to keep waiting for someone to break us out.” planet hit jaron again in the cheek, watching as his body collapsed on the floor.

it wasn't fun killing his allies like this.

slowly, jaron sat up from where he laid on the floor, running a hand down his face with furrowed brows.

“yeah,” he sighed. “i know.”
