exams

This test is supposed to help you determine whether or not

Your grief is justified. Taking this is already proof

Of a guilty conscience. Let's begin.

1. Where did your brother die?

- A few feet in front of you
- In a ravine

c. In your own home

This question is supposed to be easy. Now let me ask you again,

1. Where did your brother die?

a. In his father's arms, when you had

More than enough time to stop him

b. A place you both carved for yourselves

In the earth, which spat you both back out

c. In his office while you slept soundly,

Selfishly, one could say.

Fine. Let's try something else.

2. Do you miss him?

a. Yes

b. No

c. I'd prefer not to answer

Come on, C is a coward's choice.

2. Do you miss him?

a. You wish I didn't

b. It would be easier if you didn't

c. But you would be lying if you said “no”

Hm. Moving on.

3. Why did you trust him?

- a. He was a leader
- b. He was my best friend
- c. He was my brother

He told you he was going to do it. He said he would blow it

All up in front of you. Why did you believe it would go differently?

3. Why did you trust him?

- a. You were stupid
- b. You were never meant for war
- c. You thought you could save him even though he Never went back on his promises but you

Knew you could have done something and you

Did everything you could you promised

That you would save home but home was not Just the home he made but he never understood that

And you couldn't just give u

Okay. That's enough.

You should have known better.

If you did, this wouldn't hurt as much.

But you never learn. He's left again

And you still haven't learned.

End Notes

is this similar to my last poem? yes! let's not talk about it
